This forum will focus on the tactics currently used to accomplish greater youth voter participation. We will address the significance and urgency of the youth vote and the effectiveness of tactics such as Rock the Vote. The goal of the session is to emerge with a better overall picture of major organizational efforts for youth mobilization and to discuss ways in which young people can increase engagement in the democratic process and build strong morale. This panel discussion is part of The Century Foundation's policy-in-perspective brown bag lunch forums, designed for interns working in New York City.
